

FOUNDATIONS OF CONVERSATION ANALYSIS

Friday 9 March - Sunday 11 March 2018
The University of Queensland, St Lucia Campus

ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

This workshop will examine the organisation of turn taking, elements of transcription, and action sequencing in conversation. We will explore the turn taking system, including such topics as how speakers identify and orient to units of talk, how interlocutors project and coordinate speaker transition, and how to tell the difference between overlap and interruption. We will provide instruction on how to produce an accurate transcript that captures a broad range of vocal elements of speaker delivery. Additionally, we will explore how participants build courses of actions through adjacency pairs and examine aspects of preference organisation. Participants will be expected to complete a reading assignment and an analytic exercise beforehand.

The workshop is designed for graduate students and researchers interested in developing skills in qualitative analysis of social interaction through conversation analytic methods. The workshop is aimed at those with some prior exposure to CA and will also be suitable for researchers interested in consolidating and renewing their conversation analytic skills.

Sessions will comprise primarily of small group activities, involving systematic introduction to instructional content and data analysis procedures, working with a wide range of data corpora, including everyday interactions, family mealtimes, medical and clinical encounters, and emergency helplines.
